

Got a GPS?

Contributed by Ryan Bohnert
Monday, 12 January 2009

GPS devices have become one of the most popular gifts for the Christmas holiday. No matter where you are or what you are doing, these handy devices can be found everywhere. And there are several things you need to know before you decide to buy one, so here is a few tips to carry with you on your first purchase.

First of all, you need to decide what type of GPS device you really want. You have auto, outdoor, marine, and hybrid GPS devices. The hybrids have a combination of auto and handheld features.

Second, depending on your needs, make sure you select the right device for your environment. Each device will offer different functionality depending on its type. So if you buy an auto GPS device, make sure you don't have to look at the screen to get directions, a device where you can listen to directions would be a great pick.

Finally, if you are looking for the best brand out there, look no farther than Garmin. They have a great selection of products for any environment and they have the support to go with it. Thanks! Ryan at www.stjoepark.com.